Search for tickets

- Looked for flights to London from Denver.
- British Airways seemed to offer some of the cheapest available flights.
- Compared flights on Expedia to see if there were better deals.
- Dealt with frustrating websites that were not loading or working properly.
- I had to compare different departure times, layovers, and baggage fees.
- Some flights initially looked cheap but became more expensive after additional fees.

Search for hotel/Airbnb

- I had difficulty deciding whether a hotel or Airbnb would be a better option.
- Needed to compare prices, locations, and customer reviews across multiple websites.
- Was unsure which neighborhoods in London would be the safest and most convenient.
- Some accommodations looked affordable but were far away from popular attractions.
- I had to consider additional fees, cancellation policies, and check-in times.

Itinerary

- I had trouble deciding which attractions and activities were worth visiting.
- I wanted to visit multiple places but wasn't sure how much time each activity would take.
- Needed to research opening hours, ticket prices, and reservation requirements.
- Found it difficult to organize activities based on their locations.
- Didn't want to overplan the trip and leave no time to explore.

Transportation

- Needed to figure out how to get from the airport to the hotel.
- Had to research London's public transportation system, including the Underground and buses.
- Was unsure whether public transportation, taxis, or Uber would be more convenient.
- Needed to understand transportation costs and how to pay for fares.
- Had trouble estimating how long it would take to travel between attractions.

Budgeting

- Had difficulty estimating the total cost of flights, accommodations, food, and activities.
- Needed to convert prices from British pounds to US dollars.
- Wanted to find affordable options without sacrificing comfort or convenience.
- Was unsure how much extra money to set aside for unexpected expenses.

Destination Research

- Needed to research the weather and what clothes to pack.
- Had to check passport and UK entry requirements.

- Wanted to learn about local customs, safety, and common tourist scams.
- Needed to figure out phone service, internet access, and payment options.

Overall Experience: I think planning this trip was stressful and time consuming. It seems like the idea of traveling is more exciting than actually planning everything out. The biggest frustration was having to use so many different websites just to compare flights, hotels, transportation, and activities. I also realized how many small details go into planning a trip that I hadn't originally considered. I wish there was one platform that could organize everything, compare prices, and help create a realistic itinerary based on my budget and preferences.

Search for Tickets

- Searched for flights from Denver to Barcelona and compared different airlines to find the best option.
- Finding flights with reasonable departure and arrival times was harder than expected.
- Some flights had long layovers, which made the overall travel time much longer.
- Had to go back and forth between websites to compare prices, layovers, and flight schedules.
- Realized how helpful it would be to have a platform that shows the best flight options based on price and travel time.

Search for Hotel / Airbnb

- Compared hotels and Airbnbs before deciding to book an Airbnb in Barcelona.
- Finding an affordable place in a good location was one of the biggest challenges.
- Since I wasn't familiar with Barcelona, it was difficult to know which neighborhoods would be most convenient.
- Some accommodations seemed affordable until additional fees were included.
- Learned that location matters just as much as price, especially when visiting a city for the first time.

Itinerary

- Planned to visit Sagrada Família, spend time at the beach, go shopping, and explore restaurants and nightlife.
- Had trouble narrowing down which activities I wanted to do because Barcelona had so many options.
- Figuring out the distance between attractions made planning my days more complicated.
- I wanted to enjoy the city without spending too much money on activities.
- Realized that having an itinerary organized by location and personal interests would make planning much easier.

Transportation

- Mainly relied on Uber, taxis, and walking to get around Barcelona.
- Getting from the airport to my Airbnb was confusing since I wasn't familiar with the area.
- Sometimes I struggled with figuring out which routes would get me to my destination the fastest.
- The language barrier made communicating with some drivers more difficult.
- Walking worked well for nearby places, but longer distances required transportation.
- Having clear directions and transportation recommendations would have saved time.

Budgeting

- A large portion of my spending went toward nightlife, Ubers, and taxis.
- Before the trip, I wasn't sure how much money I should bring for everyday expenses.
- Converting euros to US dollars made it harder to understand how much I was actually spending.
- Unexpected expenses added up throughout the trip.
- Staying within my budget became challenging, especially when going out.
- Having a tool that tracks spending and converts currencies would have helped me manage my money better.

Destination Research

- Researched passport and entry requirements to make sure I had everything needed to travel internationally.
- Checked Barcelona's weather ahead of time to figure out what clothes to pack.
- Looked into international phone service and internet access so I could stay connected during the trip.
- Tried to prepare for language differences before arriving in Spain.
- Communicating with locals was sometimes challenging because of the language barrier.
- Learned how important it is to understand basic travel requirements and local customs before visiting another country.

Overall, I really enjoyed my time in Barcelona, but planning the trip took more effort than I expected. The hardest parts were finding convenient flights, choosing where to stay, and figuring out how to get around a city I wasn't familiar with. Budgeting was also a challenge because smaller expenses, especially transportation and nightlife, started adding up. Traveling internationally made me realize how many things you have to consider before and during a trip. This experience connects directly to RoamReady because a platform that brings together travel planning, budgeting, transportation, and activities could make the entire process much easier. Instead of spending so much time researching and organizing everything separately, travelers could focus more on enjoying their trip.
